CITY AND VICINITY.

PEDARNEY, the Pelander who committed suicide, was buried yesterday.

SEE advertisement of elegant furnished house for rent, by Jerome S. Blake.

THE new theatre at Central city, has been named the Belvidere. It will be dedicated this week.

JUNEIRD, alias McMann, who was shot by Cleveland at Black Hawk a few days ago, is supposed to be out of danger.

THE latest political gossip is that Jacob J. Kaiser will probably come out as a candidate for County Clerk and Recorder.

IRON fronts are being put into the adjacent boot and shoe store, Nos. 230 and 232 Fifteenth street, occupied by Charles Johnson and the Earth Brothers.

THE case of Springer vs. Chessman et al, which has been on trial in the probate court for several days past, was given to the jury at about 5 o'clock last night, but at midnight they had not yet agreed upon a verdict.

THE Rev. B. T. Vincent, in retiring from the pulpit of the Lawrence Street M. E. Church, takes with him the regrets and good wishes of the congregation, and a gift of $130, which was presented to him Tuesday night.

ONE of the jail prisoners was allowed the other evening to retain his toothpick, and with this powerful implement he succeeded in cutting one of the bars, but was discovered in time to prevent escape.

FROM the New York Sun: "Miss. Octavia Le Vert is enjoying her visit to Colorado exceedingly, receiving many attentions from the hospitable citizens of the territory, and expressing her intention to see the highest peaks of the Rockies before her return to New York."

IT has cost, at the lowest estimate, $25,000 to repair all the washouts and rebuild all the bridges partially or totally destroyed on the Denver and Rio Grande Railway. At least a dozen bridges had to be almost entirely rebuilt. The grade is stronger now at all the damaged points than it was before the floods, and the line is in perfect operation from one end to the other.

TUESDAY evening one of the members of the family of J. M. Culver, No. 545 Arapahoe street, heard some fluttering among the feathered tribe in the rear of the house, and quietly stepped out to see what was up, when, lo and behold, the first thing that was visibly "up," and that on the chicken coop, was a couple of boys in the act of catching the fowls and handing them down to an old woman, (probably their mother,) who stood beneath; stability, but head on having broiled chicken for breakfast, yesterday. Suffice it to say, that the said her children made a quick retreat, in charming disorder.

PIONEER'S BENEFIT.

The Woods Fisher Hose Company has elected new officers as follows: Foreman, Charles Calley; First Assistant, D. L. Mitchell; Second Assistant, R. D. Hale; Third Assistant, George Welch; Secretary, C. E. Magor; Treasurer, Charles Lintes; First Pipeman, T. T. Higgins; Second Pipeman, E. Gillis. The Secretary is hereafter to receive an annual salary of $50.

A RANCHMAN STRUCK MISSOURI.

A man named Muir, living on a ranch a short distance from Sharpsburg station, on the Kansas Pacific Railroad, a few miles east of the city, attempted suicide, yesterday, with probable success, by shooting himself in the head with a revolver. A neighbor was dispatched to the city for a physician. Beyond this, and the fact that at last accounts he was still alive, we have no particulars.

TO MANITOU AGAIN.

Saturday comes but once a week; exactly as often as the merry Manitou excursions; consequently, if you don't go to Manitou next Saturday you will have to wait a week for another chance at an $8 trip in good company and with ample time for enjoyment and sight-seeing. This hot weather is making everybody anxious to get out of town for a breath of fresh air, and the air is fresher at Manitou than almost anywhere else.

THE WEBB MEETINGS TO-NIGHT.

This evening, at Guard Hall, Miss Emma Webb, the very talented and versatile artiste, will appear in dramatic impersonations, readings, and delineations, comprising a chaste and charming entertainment of real merit and rich novelty, for the benefit of the organ fund of the Central Presbyterian church. Committees of representative friends of this church are making great preparations for this, the literary and dramatic treat of the season. A full and fashionable audience is assured.

HEADLESS AFTER THE CHINESE.

A crowd of young heathens amused themselves last evening by hooking a few boulders through the windows of Gin Wan's "washee" house on Fifteenth street, between Arapahoe and Curtis. One of the missiles struck a young Chinaman on the cheek, producing a wound that bled copiously. The young sealawags took to their heels, and were not seen afterwards in the neighborhood. Later in the evening some older headlesses dropped a brick through the window of a Chinese mansion on Wazee street.

THE ESCAPED JAIL BIRDS.

The jail-breakers, Hall, Wilder, and Leighton, were seen in Dutch Fred's cañon, ten miles south of the California Ranch, or forty miles from the city, Tuesday afternoon, by a German who was hunting his cattle. The man, when first observed, were seated in a row at the roadside, but instantly retreated up the hill into the timber. They all carried guns. The cañon is full of hiding places, and they are almost as securely entrenched there as the Modocs were in the lava beds. Sheriff Willoughby and his posse are supposed to be close upon them.

THE COMEDY TROUPE.

Guard Hall was not filled last evening to witness the first appearances of the New York comedy troupe, but a number were present and seemed to enjoy the entertainment. There were some good features in the programme, which was sufficiently varied to suit every taste, and there was nothing open to criticism, unless it was the exuberance of an individual in one of the procenium boxes, who offended the audience so much amusement that the stage business was partially neglected. There will be another performance this evening, and those who enjoy light comedy and variety acting will find it to their interest to attend, as Denver nowadays seldom has an opportunity to see better general artists than the New York comedy troupe.

THE WEATHER REPORT.

Sergt. George Fuller, of the Signal Service, United States army, reports the following condition of the weather at Denver at 9:05 last night:

Denver, Colorado—Height of barometer, 30.145; thermometer, 72°; relative humidity per cent., 52; direction of wind, south; velocity, miles per hour, 4; pressure in pounds per square foot, .03; force reduced to Beaufort scale, gentle; amount of upper clouds, 0; direction of upper clouds, 0; amount of lower clouds, 2-4; rainfall in last 6 hours, .14; state of weather, fair. Maximum temperature, 88; minimum temperature, 64.

ARRIVAL OF A PRISONER.

Sheriff Shock, of Summit county, arrived from Breckinridge, last evening, with J. W. Yankee, charged with murdering his traveling companion, about a year ago, in a lonely place in the mountains, while the two were walking from Georgetown to Montezuma. As the crime was committed in Summit county, the accused was taken to Breckinridge for trial, where, after putting in a plea of not guilty, he procured a change of venue to Clear Creek county. George H. Mills, acting sheriff, took charge of the prisoner, and he will be confined in the Arapahoe county jail until court meets at Georgetown, which will be in December.

REPORTS ABOUT THE KANSAS EXPEDITION.

Some weeks ago, it will be remembered, a party of Illinoisans, with P. P. Pepper as Captain and Jim Kennon for guide, hailed a few days in the city, on their way to western Colorado, or Arizona, or somewhere. They didn't appear to have any very definite object, and they were provokingly reticent, leading people to surmise anything they pleased about their destination. After outfitting and provisioning here for an all-summer trip, the company moved off into the mountains. That was the last heard of them until a few days ago, when one of the party returned here, having, as he claims, traveled 250 miles. He says he left the expedition on Bear River, and they were discouraged, disorganized, and ready to return. He says, moreover, that Kennon, failing as a guide, and proving utterly useless and worthless, had been set adrift by the party, and was making his way to the settlements, shoeless and coatless. All this has a smack of improbability about it, and with this comment we submit the returned prospector's statement for just what it is worth.

HEALING OF THE POLICE SCIMS.

John Rood was bought before Justice Walker, yesterday, charged with stealing a trunk and two robes from the Marsh House. The Justice, being satisfied, after hearing the evidence, that there was no intent to commit a crime, dismissed the case, but immediately fined the defendant $10 and costs for an assault on E. N. Marsh, proprietor of the aforesaid hotel.

That Charles Ward keeps a disorderly saloon, on Thirteenth street, in West Denver, is a fact to which ten witnesses bore testimony yesterday, in the police court. This state of affairs was sworn to by Leander McCarty, George Wortman, M. J. Degan, John McPhee, George Streb, W. C. Rippey, Hester S. Wisner, M. H. Baloon, J. D. Cornell, and Policeman Smith. Among those who furnished rebutting testimony were Gus Vogus, Warren H. Brookfield, Sam Leonard, and Andy Allen. Sayer taxed Ward $25, and revoked his saloon license. The case will be appealed. Ward was afterward fined $15 for permitting women to assemble at his place for the purpose of attracting customers.

A case against Jacob Gall, for an assault upon Mrs. Jennie H. Shipler, came up before Justice Walker yesterday. On hearing the evidence in full the Justice reserved his decision until to-day at 11 o'clock. One of the friends of the defendant, taking exceptions to something said by one of the attorneys, struck his breast excitedly and asserted that his activity was not Dutch but German. The amendment was accepted, and the court adjourned.

NEWS FROM ABROAD.

A Frightful and Fatal Fight With Bowie Knives.

A Pedestrian Followed Through the Woods by a Cougar.

A Citizen of Kansas City Hacked and Gagged in the Streets.

A Strange Piece of History From Montana.

An Evil that is Practiced on the Overland Railroads.

A Desperate Duel Beyond the Rockies.

A frightful and fatal affray occurred at Eberhardt City, recently, says the White Pine News, between two men by the names of Jackson and Beck. The former was recently from Arizona, and the latter has been a resident of Eberhardt City for the past few months, engaged in keeping a saloon. The two had a quarrel a short time before the fatal meeting, in which Jackson made an assault upon Beck with a knife, but was driven off by Beck with a fire-shovel. Some three or four hours after this Jackson returned to Beck's saloon, and while the latter was standing in the doorway, Jackson plunged an eight-inch bowie-knife to the hilt in Beck's side, and the two clinched, and a very fierce encounter ensued, Jackson using his knife and fatally stabbing Beck, who, however, succeeded in freeing himself from Jackson, and ran as far as Duce's saloon, a distance of sixty yards, when he was overtaken by Jackson, who was pursuing his victim with a bloody and fiendish instant. Beck at this place called for protection, but before the astonished bystanders could render him assistance, the human fiend had done his work: he had given poor Beck five fatal stabs. At this juncture a party by the name of Brown, seeing what was going on, knocked Jackson off from the person into the street with a chair, and while he was down, Beck, while actually dying, crawled to Jackson, and cutting the tendon of his right heel from behind, thereby rendering him helpless, and giving him a fatal wound. Beck died almost immediately after being separated from Jackson, and the latter was brought to the county jail, where he lingered until Wednesday last, when death ended his career. No one thereabouts knows anything of the former career of Jackson; all that is known is his statement that he is from Arizona. Beck was considered a peaceable man, and leaves an invalid widow to mourn his untimely end.

Adventure With a Cougar.

As a test of nerve, the recent experience of a man traveling a wood road over in Washington Territory, as related by one of our exchanges, is as remarkable as any on record. The man was a speculator, looking out wild land, and he trudged through the forest, following the almost unused path formed by an old road made by pioneers in the wilderness. His mind was devoted to one subject—the examination of the kind of trees upon the land about him, and of the character of the soil, and he failed to notice for some time a "pit-a-pat" upon the dead leaves near him. He at first scarcely looked down, when he felt something rubbing against his legs and heard a slight purring sound, but when he did look his heart came up in his mouth, and a cold sweat started as suddenly as though he were suspended by a weak rope over Niagara. Pressing itself softly against his legs, twining about him as he walked, moving its fierce body swiftly, but with never a sound, turning up fierce eyes with something almost like a terrible laugh in them, was a huge cougar! No chicken was this man in the woods, but his account of the manner in which his hat was raised by his hair is not to be considered as apocryphal at all. Sleek and supple and muscular the beast glided about, and at intervals it would come closer again, and press its body against the legs of the man, the light tenuis making goose-flesh of every inch of his form. It was a terrible experience, the interviewer with the cougar in the forest primeval, and it was well for the man that his nerves were of a kind to do honor to a frontier adventurer. Steadily pursuing his course with steps that would fabricate a lunatic immediately, he kept on, and with him the beast continued its treacherous gambols. At times it would glide a few paces to the front, and roll over and over in the road, and wait for the man to come up, and then it would resume its place. Long until the impulse, almost too strong to be resisted, would come upon him to spring upon the brute, opposing fang to fange, and ending the intolerable suspense, as may risk. The movements of the terrible animal were but as the playing of a cat with a mouse, and the man knew it. The moment came, at length, when the strain could be borne no longer, and the man kicked desperately at the beast as it passed before him. The beast it bounded in front and crouched for a spring, growling hoarsely, and showing its teeth. The man stopped and shouted hopelessly for aid, while the cougar did not spring at once, but appeared weakened by the fear of a little longer. The shout, fortunately, was not in vain.

There were hunters and dogs in the immediate vicinity, as rare fortune would have it, and the hunters heard the cry from the covert as the cougar, seeing them, leaped for a tree. A few moments later the beast fell a victim to bullets, and the man with whom it had taken a stroll was telling his story and trying to restore the normal condition of his nerves by internal applications from a small flask. It was one of the episodes which turn man's hair gray—one which would, doubtless, have brought death to a man with less nerve than the hero of the affair.

CRIMES IN KANSAS CITY.

Just after supper, last evening, says the Kansas City Journal of a late date, Mr. Wm. H. Ross, freight agent of the St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern road, started out Broadway for the purpose of calling at the residence of Holmes Clayton, the tailor, No. 1444, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth, to have him cut a pair of pants. Arriving at Mr. Clayton's a little after 8 o'clock, Mr. Ross found him absent, and waited a half hour or more for him to return. It was but 9:10 when Mr. Ross, having concluded his business with the tailor, and bidding him "good night" at the gate, started away on a rapid walk in order to get home before 10 o'clock, having promised his wife to get back by that time. For a square and a little over he met no one, but just about midway between Twelfth and Thirteenth he came upon a tall fellow, whom he noticed stepped as he passed him by a few feet. Hardly had Mr. Ross observed this before he found another and a shorter man square in front of him, and then caught between the two, he was a second later in the toils, the large man jerking his hands backwards, and the smaller one tying them so tightly that it almost made him scream with pain. He scarce was this done, then a gag of hard wood, fully five inches in length by one and a half to two in width, was violently forced down his throat, and the string attached to it tied firmly at the back of his head. Thus rendered powerless to defend himself or cry for aid, the next move of the villains was to bind his feet together. In this exceptionally helpless condition, they picked him up as if he were but a mere baby, and carrying him out to the middle of the street, laid him down upon the flat of his back and proceeded to go through every pocket, one after another, until they secured his handsome gold watch and chain and $30 in money—six $5 notes. Satisfied that they had plunked him completely, the two daring scoundrels leisurely walked off, Mr. Ross declaring that he could plainly hear the jingling of his chain against his watch in the pocket of the taller one. Not until reaching the corner of Twelfth street did the highwaymen quicken their steps, but immediately upon turning the corner into Twelfth they jumped into a run, and that was the last Mr. Ross heard of them.

Working some time with his feet, he managed to get them partially loosened, and, struggling to his feet, hobbled along until he came upon a man—a German, he thinks, by his speech—standing at a gate, and whom he did his best to make understand that he wanted the cords that bound his hands and mouth cut loose. But, to his consternation, the party at the gate indignantly demanded his reason for being out at that time of night, insisting upon his moving on forthwith, buttressing the remark by that he had been served just right. Mr. Ross, almost choking over the gag in his mouth, vomiting fearfully, and feeling that his head would burst, managed to stagger back to Mr. Clayton's, whom he roused up, and from whom he received aid just in time to prevent fainting dead away. Mr. Clayton cut the cords, and Mr. Ross soon recovering, the two at once repaired to police headquarters and reported the outrage. They brought the gag, as well as the rope used for binding him with, and to look at the former one could not forbear a shudder at the thought of having it forced down the throat. It is of hickory, and plainly shows cool work with a knife upon it, being shaved off to a thin edge, the corners rounded off and bevled so as to slide easy into the mouth. At the upper end nicks were cut to keep the cord from slipping off, and it is quite evident that the job was put up by hands rather old in the business.

A SCRAP OF TERRITORIAL HISTORY.

A correspondent furnishes the Miscellan with some interesting historical facts: A former correspondent of your paper was in error concerning the name of the first white woman who came to Montana. To a Mrs. J. Brown belongs the honor of being the first white woman who came to Montana. She came from the east in the year 1864, and while crossing the Rocky Mountains gave birth to a male child, now grown to be an athletic American citizen. She, with her little baby and two fair little girls, rode alternately a stout, hardy Manitoban steer and a Canadian pony. She visited the Hudson Bay company's post, in the northern part of Missoula county, and, remaining there some days, proceeded that same season to reside, where she now resides, by one of the lesser streams of the Columbia, in Washington Territory. She then preceded Mrs. Miller in 1865, one year. Mrs. Brown is a native of the north of Scotland. So much for women.

The first proven gold of Montana was found in the vicinity of Flint Creek, tested at Colville, and made known in 1858.

The severest winter in the west in the memory of the oldest pioneers was that of 1847, beginning in October and ending with April. Horses and cattle, deer, antelope and elk were swept away. One instance of its deadening power is known to have been in a little valley of the Columbia river, in Washington Territory. Five hundred fat wild horses grazed there in one band in October, 1846. Before the winter following were over a wheel of one mile square would have covered all of them, frozen fast where they tried to paw and stand, with little to be seen of them in the deep, icy snow but their backs here and there. Among the pleasing lack of a less corpulent through or above the foam, and any of these horses can be painted. In 1860 the three springs on the present Flathead reservation were glazed hard with ice seven consecutive nights, and the Flathead lake opened late in April.

At Walla la the Columbia river is 1,500 yards broad, with a current of from three to six miles an hour, and wild horses crossed there on the 25th of March, 1865.

The winter of 1862 was the severest on live stock in the west since 1847.

A RAILROAD IMPOSITION.

Numerous complaints have been made of late concerning the impositions practiced on overland passengers by the ticket agents representing the various eastern lines running into Omaha. These impositions and misrepresentations are not developed till the traveler is well on his way across the plains and all opportunity of rectifying the grievances is gone. Its force is the strife to gain the largest share of the travel that the agents of the rival lines make all manner of statements and concessions, entirely regardless of the consequences, to the travelers, after they have left their particular line of road. In many cases second-class tickets have been sold with the unauthorized assurance that the purchaser can ride first-class through to San Francisco. Of course, this being done without the knowledge or consent of the Union Pacific, these passengers are transferred to second-class cars upon reaching Omaha. Again, it is not unusual for the agents of the rival roads at Chicago to represent to the unsuspecting traveler that their particular line children of an indefinite age will be permitted to travel free or charge, and that this privilege will extend to the Pacific coast. The conductors of the Union and Central Pacific have no option in the matter, but are obliged to collect the fare from these children when they are above the age of free passage as fixed by their respective companies. Thus this most casually conduct of the executive companies is constantly the cause of unpleasant altercations, and many complaints of the officers of the various roads, and it is the duty of the railroad officials who have the necessary authority to have the matter investigated and stopped.

The Burial of John Comstock.

A Devoted Wife's Long Search for Her Husband's Remains.

The wife of John Comstock, the discoverer of the great Comstock mine, at Virginia City, has been making a tour of the territories, in quest of information concerning her husband, who left her over twenty years ago. Twice or thrice he was reported dead, and each time the report was contradicted, until his wife was unprepared to believe him either dead or alive. About a month ago she started out on a trip of inquiry and discovery. At Cheyenne she was told, by a man who pretended to know Comstock, that he was living in southern Utah, and was very poor. The wife, ready to seize upon any hope, hastened off on the hunt of her husband, visiting nearly every town in the territory. Then she went on over to Nevada, where he was once known to everybody as the discoverer of the Comstock, and there she heard that he had died in Montana; in destitute circumstances, some years ago. She returned to Salt Lake, and from there went up into Montana, where she has found the proofs of his death. He had drifted, it seems, into the Sweetwater, Wyoming, mines, and left there with the Big Horn Expedition, in 1871. The expedition, failing of its object, was disbanded, some returning to the railroad and the remainder going on through the Yellowstone region into Montana. Comstock reached Bozeman sick, discouraged, and penniless. He often pointed to his discovery, the Comstock, then producing its $20,000,000 annually, and the thought seemed to bring despondency. One day, in the spring of 1871, he borrowed a pistol from a Mr. Dillaher, a shoemaker, and stepping outside the shop lodged a bullet in his brain. He left no property of any kind, and the expenses of his burial, which was quietly consigned, was shared among a few friends. Mrs. Comstock has found his grave, and, being possessed of means left her by her father, proposes to remove the remains to her present home, somewhere in the states.

MOURNING Goods. Steele & Price, the manufacturers of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder and Dr. Price's True Flavoring Extracts, are rewarded by having accorded to them the reputation of manufacturing good articles. It is a shameful confession to make that many people are willing to use adulterated articles, because of a small reduction in price, and in doing so offend outstanding themselves to injurious effects, for it must not be supposed that those who are willing, at the cost of reputation and for the purpose of gain, to impose adulterated goods on the public, would hesitate to use injurious substances. Dr. Price's Baking Powder and Flavoring Extracts being the most perfect made, require in preparing articles of food one-third less in quantity. aug5codtf&w1w

Prices are put lower than any lots of equal interest ever before in the city, and sold on long time and on monthly payments to parties who build at once, a distance of from 2½ to 3½ per cent. per month.
